

THE STRAITS TIMES

Digital push must be inclusive: Iswaran

(From left) M-DAQ chief executive Richard Koh, ViSenze CEO Oliver Tan, ThoughtWorks' South-east Asian head of operations and finance Wong Wen Shun and Web Imp's business director Wilson Tan with their firms' awards for Best Tech Companies to Work For. The four companies were named overall winners. ST PHOTO: KUA CHEE SIONG

🕒 PUBLISHED JUL 20, 2019, 5:00 AM SGT

Support for non-tech workers is crucial as disruption cuts across sectors, says minister

Lester Wong (mailto:lesterw@sph.com.sg)

Singapore has to take an inclusive approach to develop a workforce to meet the changing needs of the digital economy, said Minister for Communications and Information S. Iswaran yesterday.

Although the information and communications technology (ICT) sector will continue to spearhead digitalisation efforts, supporting non-ICT workers is crucial as the disruption caused by digital technologies cuts across all industries and workers, the minister said.

"This is not just about those who are in the tech industry or have a tech education. If we are to navigate this transition successfully, what we need is a workforce with deep skills able to adopt a lifelong learning culture," said Mr Iswaran.

More than 74,000 training places have been taken up or committed to since the launch of the TechSkills Accelerator (TeSA) in 2016, he said.

TeSA is a SkillsFuture initiative comprising a host of programmes aimed at equipping workers with emerging digital skills that are in demand by companies.

The Infocomm Media Development Authority is also working with the Singapore Computer Society (SCS) to reach out to non-ICT trade associations and chambers in the manufacturing, accounting and legal sectors.

Mr Iswaran was speaking at the Tech3 Forum organised by the SCS at JW Marriott Hotel Singapore South Beach, where 10 winners of the biennial Best Tech Companies to Work For awards were announced.

The winners were divided into three categories: large organisations, mid-sized organisations (with 50 to 500 staff globally) and start-ups or small organisations (with fewer than 50 staff).

COMPANY CULTURE

It really just comes down to management staying consistent with the values they pitch to employees. There's no finger pointing. I always take a nap after lunch and everyone sees me doing it. So I won't turn around and scold someone just because I see them not doing work.

WEB IMP'S BUSINESS DIRECTOR WILSON TAN, on having a positive work environment.

”

The four overall winners were global software consultancy ThoughtWorks (large organisations), fintech firm M-DAQ and artificial intelligence company ViSenze (mid-sized), and tech start-up Web Imp (small).

Mr Iswaran commended the winners for not only supporting the improvement of workers' skills, but also nurturing an inspiring culture and innovative spirit within their organisations.

"That is the key to workplace excellence and competitiveness in the infocomm media industry," he added.

Employees at home-grown fintech firm M-DAQ, which develops cross-border payment solutions, are treated as family, to the point that those who leave for other jobs are considered to be taking "sabbaticals". The firm employs 55 people.

"We keep their employee numbers when they quit, telling them they're welcome back at any time. And if they return, we give them our Boomerang Award," said chief executive Richard Koh.

"When we reach out to those who have left, they're often very happy to help us because there's this strong loyalty that has lasted beyond the term of employment."

Related Story >

$40m kitty set up for 5G trials to fuel Singapore's goal of leading in digital economy

Related Story >

Singapore is top digital society, but most feel psychological needs not met by digital economy: Study

At start-up Web Imp, which creates websites, apps and digital platforms for clients, among other digital services, its 18 employees come in to work any time they want, often voluntarily staying until 10pm.

There was no deliberate effort to engineer a positive work environment, said Web Imp's business director Wilson Tan.

"It really just comes down to management staying consistent with the values they pitch to employees," he added.

"There's no finger pointing. I always take a nap after lunch and everyone sees me doing it. So I won't turn around and scold someone just because I see them not doing work."

-
- > Terms & Conditions
 - > Need help? Reach us here.

- > Data Protection Policy
- > Advertise with us

SPH Digital News / Copyright © 2019 Singapore Press Holdings Ltd. Co. Regn. No. 198402868E. All rights reserved